Professor Giulio Vesperini

Head of Department

The Department of Linguistic and Literary, Historical, Philosophical and Legal Studies – DISTU, offers five different study courses (one three-year Bachelor's, three Master's, one single-cycle Master's), in the fields of languages, law, political communication and the protection and enhancement of the archaeological, historical and artistic heritage. Details of the course objectives, the specific subjects, and career opportunities that graduates can aspire to are available for each of the active courses. The general aim of the department, which all the courses reflect, is to train students and promote the development of research into topics that contribute to the understanding of the character and dynamics of the new institutional world in which we live. Its multi-faceted linguistic, archaeological and historic-artistic dimensions foster a desire to understand the historic context of events that constituted this process of change. The variety of disciplinary methods is critical to this programme. Methods include the analysis and dynamics of the institutional cultural European and global environment, using a variety of investigative techniques and different perspectives, with a focus on issues relating to the knowledge of archaeological, historical and artistic heritage. The expansion of the internationalization of research, in line with measures implemented for years by teachers of the Department, strengthens relationships with research groups working in the same directions in Italy and abroad. In addition to traditional teaching, the Department provides students with a variety of high standard learning experiences.

The Languages Unit provides services for learning foreign languages for all the courses offered at the University and, in particular, for students of the undergraduate and master's programmes: Modern Languages and Cultures, and Languages and Culture for International Communication. The Languages Unit has four multimedia laboratories for this purpose, all equipped with video projector and workstations.

The Computer Aided Written Italian Language Workshop (LISA! And LISA+), enables students to practise the writing and processing of multimedia texts of a professional nature.

The Workshop of Italian Multimedia Semiotics and Linguistics (SLIM) enables teachers and students to work together to store and manage data in a digital format for educational and research purposes.

The J-ARGO Workshop enables students to acquire techniques to formulate their own legal arguments by discussing various law cases and by drafting procedural documents as part of a simulated trial.

The Photography Workshop, which includes graphic layout and photographic documentation, was established in 1990 within the Faculty of Conservation of Cultural Heritage. It operates in the field of graphic and photographic documentation of archaeological materials and, more in general, in the documentation in the field of Heritage. The Workshop is also used for cartographic editing carried out with the aid of digital photogrammetric systems, and acts as a support for teaching activities and seminars.

The Natural Language Processing Workshop (NLP) guarantees the acquisition of competences related to the electronic processing and analysis of oral and written texts.

Students will learn the theoretical aspects and they will be able to practice language database construction by learning to manage the selection criteria and the use of primary text material (for example, the transcription of oral texts for various purposes), language revision which varies depending on the objective: verbalisation or institutional deposit, linguistic-semiotic analysis, marketing, etc.), methods for the representation and encoding of linguistic-textual information.

The course includes a theoretical introduction followed by practical work.

DISTU is one of 180 Italian Departments of Excellence which will receive extra funding for five years for an innovative research project. The list of winning projects was written at the end of 2017 by ANVUR (Agenzia Nazionale di Valutazione del sistema Universitario e della Ricerca), the Italian agency for the evaluation of the university and research systems. The list was published by the Italian Ministry of Education, Universities and Research on 10th January 2018 (<http://www.miur.gov.it/web/guest/dipartimenti-di-eccellenza>). DISTU's Excellence Project (Progetto di Eccellenza) has been a contender in the sector of legal sciences and it has capitalised on the interdisciplinary nature of this department. DISTU is the only department in Italy that combines the historical-philosophical sciences, languages and literature, linguistics and the historical-artistic sciences with the law. Therefore, the project has become a common point of reference for the study of the European institutional and cultural environment.

In the next five years, research projects will focus on European convergence and integration processes over the course of several centuries. Research will be linked to the political-institutional and legislative areas (regulatory traditions and the impact that European and international law have on Italian law) as well as on the cultural relationships in Europe (from language connections to intellectual and philosophical connections, from art to religion).

Teaching Aims

The undergraduate programme in Modern Languages and Culture (L-11) aims to equip graduates with an intercultural education in response to the needs of contemporary, social and professional society, with particular attention to relations between Europe and the rest of the world.

The three study plans available allow students to build their own customised study plan by taking the 19 exams of the three-year course in the linguistic-cultural areas that interest them the most: the degree course offers three-year or two-year programmes in French, English, Portuguese, Spanish, German, Arabic, Chinese and Russian (the courses include literature exams and philology exams). Students can then expand their competences with general and Italian linguistics, contemporary history, digital humanities, economics and law. All courses offer materials for distance learning on the teaching platform UniTusMoodle (<http://moodle.unitus.it/moodle/>), which allows students to interact with the teachers via the Internet and access exercises and other teaching tools designed for individual study.

Career opportunities

Graduates in Modern Languages and Cultures will be capable of carrying out a range of professional activities:

- socio-linguistic-cultural operator in multi-ethnic and multicultural contexts, for business and for public administration;
 - language executive working in cultural tourism, as well as cultural, social and extension services;
 - language expert in relations between company and customer in an international context;
- and to start a specialization in the following professions:
- translator and interpreter;
 - expert in cultural mediation;
 - expert in management of multilingual communication and information;
 - expert in the promotion of goods and services in an international field.

Graduates in Modern Languages and Culture will be able to specialize in linguistic and cultural mediation in an international context, perfecting their language training with a view to starting a career in national or international organizations operating globally. This degree gives students immediate access to the postgraduate degree course Master of Arts in Languages and Culture for International Communication LM-37 and all postgraduate training courses expressly dedicated to linguistic and cultural mediation.

Assessment

Before students can sit the exams in Language and Translation and Language and Literature, target language exams are given by Language Assistants (CEL), in cooperation with the Languages Unit of the University.

The language exams assess students' linguistic competence according to the parameters of the Common European Framework of Reference (CEFR). Each student has a personal record of their linguistic development (Language Passport) in which, for each academic year, the level reached for each target language is recorded. Subsequent to the successful outcome of the language exams, the course tutor assesses students with written and oral examinations to ascertain their expertise in the various specific subjects.

Innovations in the study programme

The Languages Unit now offers Chinese studies in answer to the continual growth of the social, political and economic relations with Asia, which has given rise to an urgent demand for training in relation to the Chinese language and culture. Along with the Chinese Language course that students will attend over a period of at least three years, students will also learn about China's rich culture, its history and its current political and economic situation. These disciplines will provide them with as complete a picture as possible of the cultural reality of contemporary China. Other courses on the history and culture of Asia provide essential support, to expand the range of studies to a broader geopolitical context than that of Europe, and to better understand the cultures and relations between the states bordering Europe and Asia. In 2015, UNITUS established a partnership with the Confucius Institute, which fostered and is going to foster cultural and scientific exchanges as well as study programmes in China. Starting from academic year 2017-2018, the teaching of Russian culture has been enhanced by separating the teaching of literature from that of language. 'The Didactics of Italian with new technologies' has been added as an optional exam.

Teaching Aims

The master's course in "Languages and Culture for International Communication" (LM-37) aims to train graduates with in-depth methodological and theoretical-scientific skills in two foreign languages, in which full fluency (not less than the C2 level of the CEFR scales for the first language, and not less than C1 level for the second language), and in-depth knowledge of the literary traditions of at least one of the chosen languages, as well as the relations that exist between language, literary tradition and cultural tradition in the widest sense, also from a diachronic perspective.

The course is structured so as to provide highly specialized training in the field of language and literary criticism, with the opportunity to acquire first rate skills either in translation or in the field of intercultural mediation.

The programme lends itself to forming graduates with high-level skills in translation, which can be used in the editorial field of academic writing, literature and multimedia. Graduates will master the theoretical and practical tools for linguistic analysis of all text types, for all speaker types, and from any kind of linguistic and/or cultural context.

Graduates will be equipped with the necessary tools they need in order to carry out research, drafting, the editing and revision of texts, as well as with the ability to use computing tools and communication aids which are essential to work as fiction and non-fiction translators and linguistic-cultural mediator, acquired also by means of internships and traineeships.

The core modules cover a wide range of topics, which are integral to the study plan. These can be combined with complementary subjects chosen by each student to suit his or her individual skills and abilities.

Students will be awarded 12 or 14 credits for further training activities which are congruent with the degree course. This will enable them to put into practice and refine the knowledge and skills acquired during their studies, through active participation and constructive contribution to the programme.

Career opportunities

The Master's course can open up a wide-range of rewarding career opportunities, for example:

- PR specialist, including work for public and private organisations as well as Italian and foreign cultural institutions;
- writer of technical texts;
- advertising executive;
- translator and intercultural mediator;
- organiser of intercultural events.

Assessment

Before students can sit the exams in Language and Translation and Language and Literature, target language exams are given by Language Assistants (CEL), in collaboration with the Languages Unit of the University.

The language exams assess students' linguistic competence according to the parameters of the Common European Framework for Languages (CEFR). Each student has a personal record of their linguistic development (Language Passport) in which, for each academic year, the level reached for each target language is recorded. Subsequent to the successful outcome of the language exams, the course tutor examines the student with written and oral examinations to ascertain their expertise in the various specific subjects.

Curricula

The second level degree course allows students to choose one of two curricula:

Literature and civilisation

Allows students to acquire in-depth competences in the literature of the different languages and in their possible historical and social links.

Cultural activity and production

Includes the integration of competences in literature and in languages with competences related to the organisation of integrated activities and cultural productions with IT resources.

Teaching Aims

Starting from academic year 2016-2017, the Department of Economics and Business (DEIM) and the Department of Linguistic and Literary, Historical, Philosophical and Legal Studies (DISTU) of the University of Tuscia are activating a second level degree course in Political Science, International Security and Public Communications (LM-62).

The course is designed both to enable three-year degree students of Political Science and International Relations to complete their academic program, and to offer three-year degree graduates from other courses of study (e.g. L-11, L-14, L-16, L-18, L-20) to deepen their knowledge in a field of interest closely related to their undergraduate studies. The second level degree course in Political Science, International Security and Public Communications offers a multidisciplinary approach. The themes of politics, economics, law, sociology and history interact with the language of public communications.

The two year course includes twelve core subjects. In the second year, there are a series of options, which include theoretical studies and practical activities, to enable students to focus on two different areas:

- issues of public communications, including the knowledge of public and political languages, the mechanisms of public communication and the media system by means of which we communicate in today's society;
- international issues, including geopolitics and international security, relations between states and the processes that signal the emergence of political or military issues which extend beyond national boundaries.

In addition, sixteen CFUs are granted for two foreign languages and these enable students to attend the Writing Workshop, through which they may gain full language proficiency both in Italian and in two foreign languages (English is a second language of the EU). These are essential skills to prepare students for their future professional careers.

Career opportunities

The second level degree course in Political, International Security and Public Communication Studies offers two very specific cultural and professional profiles:

- The profile of operator and senior expert in political science, with employment opportunities in public and private administrations, both national and international; in political institutions and public and private associations, in governmental and non-governmental organizations, public and private companies that operate internationally in the field of security;
- The profile of consultant in the management and production of public communications, with employment opportunities in national and international governmental institutions, consultancy firms, in political parties and associations, in the communications offices of government and public organizations, private companies, the press offices of the newspapers, radio and television, journalistic radio and television; as well as in on-line marketing and communications offices of public and private companies.

The training profiles allow access to the following jobs:

- Specialists in the management of the public administration
- Specialists in the control of the public administration
- Specialists in public security
- Specialists in public relations, image and similar roles
- Specialists in political science

In order to ensure a rapid and effective transition from university to the job market, the Master's course programme in Political Science, International Security and Public Communications organises work experience and internships at public and private organizations, both national and international, and gives the opportunity to access the Erasmus Plus programme grants.

Teaching Aims

The second cycle inter-class degree course in Archaeology and History of Art aims at providing students an interdisciplinary course and make them experts in the archaeological and historical-artistic heritage. Starting from their existing knowledge of different issues related to the cultural heritage, students will acquire theoretical, historical and critical-methodological competences in the different areas and chronological contexts related to art development. Students will also acquire skills related to the conservation, management, promotion and protection of the archaeological and historical artistic heritage and of the institutions working in this area. The course offers two options: the archaeological option and the historical-artistic option.

The aim of the archaeological option is that of providing graduates an advanced training in archaeology that is supported by a solid foundation in history, philology and history-art of the ancient world, both in terms of methodology and in archaeological techniques. The course offers archaeological knowledge in the classical world but also in the prehistoric, protohistoric and medieval periods with a focus on etruscology, topography and numismatics. The degree course offers the full acquisition of specific knowledge and competences related to excavation and archaeological field survey, the interpretation of written sources and the reading and critical interpretation of historical-artistic elements.

The historical-artistic and promotion and protection of the artistic heritage second cycle degree course meets the needs of the job market, which is more and more oriented towards interdisciplinary cooperation between art historian, conservators, scientists and restorers ensuring the correct interventions are carried out when protecting our historical and artistic heritage.

The degree course includes teachings related to the main subjects which will guide students in their choice of more specific study plans. Because the areas are vast, complex and necessary for the study plan, some of the scientific areas that are distinctive of this course will also be included in the similar and integrated subjects.

As far as instruction is concerned, for each module students will be allocated a tutor who is a specialist in that particular field. He or she will support them with academic enquiries relating to all aspects of their studies. Lessons will be held in a classroom environment and seminars in small groups with the tutor. Each module includes written assignments, activities in the lab, visits to archaeological and historic-artistic sites of interest, such as museums, art galleries, art foundations, archaeological sites, etc

Graduates can work with a high level of competence in museums, governmental agencies, specialised libraries (archaeology and history of art), local organisations and institutes working in the area of research and promotion of the archaeological and historical-artistic heritage. Archaeology graduates can work in high-responsibility roles in such sectors as:

- scientific institutions, universities and research facilities; in supervisory roles in museums, etc. at a national, regional and local level;
- in managerial roles in the area of research and management of the historical-archaeological and documentary heritage with public and private institutes;
- companies, cooperatives and other private groups cooperating in all necessary activities, from excavations to public use with the organisations in charge of protecting the archaeological heritage;
- publishing, advertising and other media specialised in the archaeological sector.
- Graduates in art history and protection of the historic-artistic heritage will be equipped to operate in positions of high responsibility in:
- high responsibility roles in state-run institutions (governmental agencies, museums, cultural centres, local, national and international organisations) as well as private ones (art galleries, cultural foundations) that study, classify, protect, preserve, promote and manage the historical-artistic heritage, plan the documentation, carry out inspections and appraisals, set up exhibitions and work in museum education;
- publishing, advertising and other media specialised in the historical-artistic sector.

Graduates of both courses can also move onto PhD, specialisation and master's degrees and work as specialised consultants in the cultural and communication sectors.

Teaching Aims

The second level degree course in Law offers a solid, comprehensive and balanced foundation in law, with the aim of training the future country leaders in the industrial, governmental organisations, professional and research sectors.

In particular, this degree course aims at:

- giving students an interdisciplinary legal training that is focussed on Europe and has an international perspective;
- providing students a good institutional preparation combined to a didactic methodology that strengthens analysis and case-study thanks to the cooperation of professionals who already work in different sectors (judges, lawyers, public administrators; directors of the legal offices of small and medium-sized businesses and more).

This knowledge allows students to understand and interpret legal rules, their evolving dynamics and their interactions with the social and institutional framework.

The Master's in Law also offers the necessary intellectual tools to process texts, documents and legal acts by making use of language skills (particularly English) and computer skills gained during their studies.

Students can spend some time abroad thanks to the Erasmus+ programme, the USAC initiatives and the 'international semester', which started in 2018. During this semester, some subjects are taught entirely in English.

Career opportunities

The second level degree course in Law gives graduates the knowledge, skills and qualifications needed to continue studying after their degree with a master's degree or a PhD or to start working straight away.

A law degree will enable students to participate in the exams to access the courts, advocacy and notary services. It also offers employment possibilities in business, public administration and private institutions, both national and international.

The degree course includes law workshops aimed at strengthening the students' abilities to analyse legal texts and regulations and develop their legal argumentative skills.

By taking part in the workshops, the legal training and other external workshops, students can accumulate the credits they need for "other training activities".

The course promotes qualified and innovative research in the field of socio-historic sciences and cultural heritage exploring the history of human societies and cultural production both tangible and intangible, and specifically artistic, spanning the period from antiquity to contemporary times. The comprehension of historical and archival sources, archaeological testimonies and artistic expression requires their placement in a landscape marked by evidence, memories and legacy, while making use of diagnostic disciplines and information technologies. A PhD in Historical and Heritage Sciences enables students to carry out research at Italian and foreign universities, but it will also enable them to assume positions with public and private institutes, restoration institutes, museums, research institutes, publishing houses, documentation and cataloguing centres. The skills acquired can be an additional qualification for employment in journalism, public communication and cultural action.

The Department of Linguistics and Literary, Historical, Philosophical and Legal Studies of this University, in cooperation with Link Campus University of Rome, will launch the School of Specialization for Legal Professions in academic year 2018/2019.

The two-year course offers Law graduates additional instruction. By applying an integrated theoretical and practical learning approach and by developing a close relationship professionals of this sector, the course provides students with the skills to sit the State exam, qualifying them for the practice of legal professions (magistrate, lawyer and notary).

The School program will consist of a common core first-year curriculum and two second-year curriculum options: legal studies and notary studies.

The School has a limited number of students. Students who are interested will have to pass a test based both on the evaluation of individual qualifications and on the results of a written test. Courses start in autumn 2018.

Apart from the usual training courses, which include legal training in law firms, the University of Tuscia offers law graduates the opportunity to gain some knowledge of the job market by taking part in extracurricular training programmes (internships). New graduates have a wide choice: the existing internship programmes allow them to acquire work experience in state-run organisations, courts, independent authorities, companies working in traditional sectors and new technologies and law firms.

THE LANGUAGES UNIT

Located in the San Carlo Campus, the Language Service Unit is part of the DISTU Department. It provides foreign language learning support for all degree courses available in this Department. Students of the degree courses belonging to the Department are offered preparatory language courses and activities, in keeping with the Language and Translation requirements included in the curricula. The Languages Unit organizes and administers placement tests to verify language entry levels and hosts certification bodies for tests to obtain some of the required international certificates, CAPLE (Portuguese) and HSK3 (Chinese) [info distulab@unitus.it].

The Unit has four computer labs (all equipped with video projector and individual computer stations). Students can use a wide range of audiovisual, computer programmes and advanced teaching tools for self-study and improvement of the target languages.

The Unit has a cutting-edge, multimedia teaching platform - UnitusMoodle (<http://moodle.unitus.it>) - which provides additional support for the users' activities and study methodologies. Moodle is an acronym for Modular Object-Oriented Dynamic Learning Environment, which is an open source web platform for e-learning, designed to create and manage online courses with ample possibilities of interaction between student and teacher. Almost every language test available is accessible on the Moodle system.

The labs are often used by the foreign language teaching assistants (CEL) and they are the working environment of the lab technicians. The work of the language assistants is guided by the Language and Translation course tutors, as well as the Coordinator of the Languages Unit. Their work is based on practical and communicative language learning techniques. The course tutors of Language and Translation or Language and Literature, however, focus on issues relating to translation, inter-linguistic relationships, and the cultural and literary aspects of the countries where the target language is the official language. In addition, the Languages Unit carries out language assessment to certify the level of competence attained by students in the four skills: reading, writing, listening and speaking - in the manner prescribed by the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages. In this regard, the Passport for Languages has been introduced, to complete the student language training programme, in which students record their language achievements.

The two language syllabi (three year degree course and second level degree course) are available for download. They offer a description of the competences students need. More information on the passport and its uses can be found on www.unitusdistu.net - the Languages Unit website.

In order to be admitted to the Bachelor's degree courses and single-cycle Law courses, students must have a high school diploma or other recognized educational qualification, which corresponds to current legislation and the University Regulations (art. 3 c.2 and 20). Applicants will also have to take a mandatory, but non-selective entrance test, in order to verify that their knowledge of basic Italian is sufficient for them to attend courses. However, the test does not preclude enrolment. Students who do not pass the test are welcome to enrol, but must improve their basic skills within the first year of the course, by attending support activities/lessons, subsequent to an interview with the course director or with a member of the teaching staff.

To enrol on the Master's degree course one must have a Bachelor's degree or have completed at least 60 credits in the areas listed in the study programme of the chosen course.

To enrol on the second level degree course in "Languages and Culture for International Communication" (LM37), students of the three year degree course have to possess 42 CFUs in subjects related to foreign languages and literature and in other related subjects.

USEFUL INFORMATION

Academic requirements for enrolment

In order to access the second level degree course in Political Science, International Security and Public Communications, three year degree course graduates have to possess 36 CFUs in the scientific sectors specified in the study plan.

In order to access the second level degree course in Archaeology and History of Art students have to possess the three year degree and the curricular prerequisites specified in the study plan.

Attendance

Attendance is not mandatory, but is strongly recommended. Different programmes for attending and non-attending students could be introduced. For example, a teacher could evaluate attendance to lectures, seminars and workshops for the purpose of the exam.

The study plan. What it is and how to fill it in Straight after enrolment, each student is required to compile his or her individual study plan.

The study plan is the list of exams the student intends to take during his three-year or five-year study programme. Filling in the curriculum is essential to be able to book exams. In addition, in order to book an exam it is compulsory to complete the anonymous questionnaire regarding the teaching quality of the subject to be tested.

Each course of study (undergraduate, master's or single-cycle) offers one or more study programmes that can be read and downloaded. The study programme can be planned by choosing the courses offered in each student's enrolment year.

The study programme can be completed online, from the student portal:

<http://portalestudenti.unitus.it/Default.aspx>. In order to access, it is necessary to use the personal credentials (user name and password). Once the form has been filled in, students will have to validate their study plans online and the system will confirm whether there are no errors in the form itself.

The student's personal study programme can be modified during the course, in accordance with the module choices and the obligation to sit specific preparatory exams before others.

All requests for changes to the personal study programme that are not accepted by the student portal must be submitted for approval to the course study Council.

Module Choice

The curricula proposed in the course programmes all have a number of compulsory core subjects, together with related and complementary modules offering a choice of subjects of equal credits, in addition to subjects that students can choose, as long as they are in line with the course and award the required number of credits.

For the Master's Degree in Law, the chosen module exams can be taken at any time, provided that they have been preceded by at least three of the required exams.

Orientation and mentoring

The Orientation and Mentoring Service includes a number of activities designed to support the students' participation in university life, in order to facilitate progressive integration alongside their study and development process. With this aim in mind, the Services Department offers a wide range of information, tips and advice so that students can fully benefit from the services offered by the University. The service is open to students who have already enrolled and to high school students who are interested in learning about the courses offered in the Department. To this end, the Orientation and Mentoring service in collaboration with the school system, organizes numerous activities, such as Course Presentations (both on campus and in schools), Open Days, themed lessons, lectures, cultural activities (e.g. cinema exhibitions, participation in the Caffèina festival), project work and other events of educational interest. The service is provided by experienced students (mentors) and coordinated by the academic staff that can be contacted via email and social networks for information or to plan events and meetings.

Computer Aided Written Italian Language Workshops (LISA! and LISA+)

The LISA! And LISA+ workshops during the first and second semester are aimed at improving the students' academic writing abilities. They teach essential writing techniques with digital tools (typesetting, editing, preparation, revision) and deal with the main themes of argumentative writing for academic purposes; they initiate students to dissertation writing.

Professors R. Gualdo, R. Petrilli, S. Telve

A workshop to simulate judgements and legal argumentation (J- ARGO) started in the academic year 2013-2014 - following the incorporation of two previous workshops on simulated legal judgment (GIUSI) and legal argumentation (ARGO). The J- ARGO workshop aims to strengthen, the capacity for analysis of legal texts and judgements on the one hand, and the processing capacity of legal arguments on the other.

NATURAL LANGUAGE PROCESSING workshop - Transcription and language processing tools and techniques

This workshop guarantees the acquisition of competences related to the electronic processing and analysis of oral and written texts.

Students will learn the theoretical aspects and they will be able to practice language database construction by learning to manage the selection criteria and the use of primary text material (for example, the transcription of oral texts for various purposes), language revision which varies depending on the objective: verbalisation or institutional deposit, linguistic-semiotic analysis, marketing, etc.), methods for the representation and encoding of linguistic-textual information. The course includes a theoretical introduction followed by practical work.

HOW TO REACH DISTU

The teaching units of the DISTU courses are divided between two locations.

The computer labs, the Languages Unit, the Offices and classrooms and the studios of the Professors for Courses: L-11, LM-37, LM-62 and LMG-01 are located at San Carlo Campus, which boasts a park and the twelfth-century Church of San Carlo, which houses the Aula Magna.

The classrooms, faculty studios and administration offices of Courses: LM-2 & LM-89 are located at the Riello Campus.
